Extra periods of fifteen minutes each way were required to settle the question of supremacy, and Edwards, of New York, shot the winning goal right after the opening of the first of these periods. For half an hour the rival teams battled fiercely to gain the upper hand, but the Jerseymen, to the delight of a big crowd of rooters from over the Hudson, set the pace by being the first to score, when Brierley, taking a pass from Knowles, found New York's net. THE trip of the Harvard University football team to California was a wholesome thing for intercollegiate sports. In the first place, it was a kick in the slats, as it were, to tradition, and a swing on the chin for precedent. Not so long ago the powers at Harvard would have turned pale at the thought of the Harvard University team

Out on the shores of the Pacific, where the oranges and the real estate booms bloom all the year round, they had weird notions of what a Harvard man might be. They pictured him as a youth with a high forehead, a defective chin and a funny accent. The flying visit of the Caseys the Murrays and the Horweens disillusioned the youth of the Pacific Coast to a considerable extent.

In about as rough a give-and-take football game as has even been staged anywhere, the Harvard team beat the Oregon University team by a small margin, as far as the score goes, but by a wide enough margin, as tional Lawn Tennis Association, at the far as playing goes, to convince the inmates of the Pacific Coast that Fair next annual meeting of that body on Harvard had the better football team. The Oregonians started with the dea of rushing the visitors off their feet. The game finished with Harvard On that day, when the delegates actually doing this little thing to the Oregonians.

Since that game the youth of the Pacific Coast is musing to himself somewhat to this effect: "We had the Harvard chaps all wrong. We thought they were soft and they turned out to be just as good roughnecks as we are ourselves, and maybe a little bit better." And the Harvard men after that game realized that they had been in a fight and left the the surplus, it was decided will be nominated for president, to take Coast with a high regard for their opponents. They learned that good the place to be vacated by George football and good sportsmanship were not confined to any particular

Some of the conservatives still may be dubious over this innovation in the Harvard football schedule, but the results prove that the trip was For the last two or three years My- of considerable educational value. It is a big strip of country, and anyrick has been a vital force in American thing that promotes a better understanding between widely separated lawn tennis affairs, and it has been sections and brings the young men into closer contact is of considerable use. And you have got to admit that a football game brings them into close contact at times, so close that they occasionally have to be pried apart. By the way, Harvard deserves great praise for the manner in which the team was handled. The same superb generalship that won

Baseball Awaits Development

The nominating committee, consistclogged to a certain extent by injunctions, permanent and temporary. The attorneys have been batting .400 at least, but the ivory hunters and the traders so far have been loafing on the job. And there is lot to do. The three teams that belong to greater New York need considerable fixing. McGraw needs a new infield, the Yanks need a new outfield and Wilbert Robinson needs a lot of things. Some startling trades, purchases and deals will have to be made before the swallows start volplaning this year.

The chairmanship of the National Baseball Commission will have to be decided shortly. So far "Big Bill" Edwards seems to be the best prospect and the best man in sight for the job. William is a diplomat, but at the same time he is not the man to dodge a vital issue. He has plenty of common sense, and that makes the most essential qualification for the chairmanship of the ruling body in baseball.

With a chairman possessing this qualification, backed by the force to establish the use of common sense, a lot of baseball differences could be settled for the good of the game. A man with no entangling alliances and strong enough to resist any partisan influence might be able to get the Scot's beautiful chevbaseball out of the courts and keep it on the diamond where it belongs. iots were good only for fine And the only time that baseball is of much interest to the fans who mak the game and pay for it is when it is played on the diamond.

Would Prevent Tie Football Games

A PRINCETONIAN submits some suggestions for the doing away with tie football games and suggests that the students of the intercollegiate game meditate over them until the rules committee gets together

It is very unsatisfactory to have football games end in a tie score, as one/team is undoubtedly better than the other, and therefore I would suggest that the game be continued into a fifth period. The first team to score in this extra time of play would be the winner and the game would then end. If there is no score in this period then it is proven that both teams are evenly matched. It often happens that one team will come along toward the end of the game and play remarkable ball, but time is called and the game ends in a tie. This extra period would correspond to the extra inning games in

At Hampton Roads the Training School played the Newport Station to a 6-6 tie, and after an extra period had been decided upon won out by the score of 25 to 6. This is pretty good proof that the Hampton team was the superior, but it would not have been necessary to have gone through the whole period to have shown it.

Take for instance the games of the past season:

Princeton. 10 Harvard..... 10

These games would no doubt have ended differently if they had played the extra period. There is even talk of Harvard and Princeton playing off their game of this year, but of course this is impossible. The game was due for a break, so imagine what would have happened in the added time. The tie would in all probability have been broken and the first team to score would have been de-

Another thing which I would like to suggest is that a touchdown made as the result of a forward pass count only five points. It does not seem fair that a team which has been leading throughout the entire game by seven points should be subjected to a tie game as the result of a touchdown made by a forward pass in the last minute of play. Some will say that they deserve the points, as they took a chance and won out. Take, for instance, the losing team in possession of the ball on their own 20-yard line. They complete a 30-yard pass and keep on going fifty yards for a touchdown. The goal is kicked and score tied. All glory to the 50-yard run. But could this have been made without the assistance of the basketball play? Retain the aerial plays, but decrease the value of its scoring power. Yale men, please note.

Will Restore the Boxing Game THE New York Legislature, which starts punching the bag this week,

THE New York Legislature, which starts punching the bag this week, is expected to evolve some sort of boxing bill. In fact, those who pipposed a boxing bill at the last session through fear of having the reputation of being altogether too liberal practically have pledged themselves to support or to refrain from opposing a boxing bill. This matter interests the fans in the vicinity of New York more particularly because the up-state cities have been holding boxing bouts openly in violation of the law and with the acquiescence of the solons who opposed a state boxing bill.

What kind of boxing bill may come out is still a mystery. A good the law and with the capulation of the law and with the acquiescence of the solons who opposed a state boxing bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty rounds to a decision, two bill would be one which would permit twenty must go twenty rounds, the boxers would have to extend themselves, and they would make quite the legislature.
